Contemporary Freedom and the New Crisis of Theatre
Between Ideological Extremism and the 'Cancel Culture'

International Conference

Nová drama / New Drama Festival 2022
18 – 21 May 2022

The Theatre Institute Bratislava – The Slovak Centre ITI
under the Patronage of ITI worldwide

“These days, the freedom of theatre is as much targeted by extremist ideologies, as it seems to be threatened by the mutations of contemporary public discourse. In Europe and beyond, the ideological extremism is gaining momentum. At the same time, the so called “cancel culture” is often described as the culmination of a purging process that has gradually limited one’s right to manifest one’s internal beliefs. It is, however, a timely response given to old and new waves of racism and xenophobia. It is thus an undeniable necessity in the face of intolerance and extremism, a defense mechanism meant to prevent not only hate speech, but hatred as such. And yet, its consequences for the arts are more and more problematic.

So, what is the current condition of theatre, between the two flanks that it has to equally resist: the raise of ideological extremism and the resentment of the cancel culture? How can it stay true to its vocation of freedom, bestowed upon its stages by a longstanding tradition, and yet fulfill its mission to reflect (on) the world itself? This may well be the new, most difficult challenge faced by playwrights, directors, and actors in a time of polarizing beliefs and social division. Will the theatre community still uphold freedom of thought and expression as its cardinal virtue?

This conference will discuss the new crisis of theatre in relation to the perils of extremism and the threats of the cancel culture. Drawing on examples illustrating both categories, such as the scandals provoked by Rodrigo Garcia’s Golgotha Picnic or the debates around the collaboration between Robert Lepage and Ariane Mnouchkine for Kanata, it will ponder the same, always relevant relationship between theatre and freedom as one of the most urgent questions of our time.”

Octavian Saiu

Individual papers as well as panel presentations will be included in sessions that are meant to map the relationship between theatre and freedom in different parts of the world, from America to Asia, from Northern Europe to Australasia. We particularly welcome submissions that address the following conference topics from various local and regional perspectives:

- the rise of extremism – new forms of censorship?
- the post-pandemic world: end of culture or rebirth – new visions and forms of art?
- the end and the beginning - artistic and theatrical reforms, historical or aesthetic views on the “end” of culture
- the concept of otherness and the new ethics of alterity in performing arts
- surveillance and dissent on the contemporary stage
- theatre and censorship in the latest context of liberal democracy
- the survival of artistic freedom in the face of political extremism
- the artists’ rights and responsibilities in contemporary Western culture
- ideological challenges and creative responses in contemporary theatre

You can submit your abstract (around 250 words) by 8 February 2022 to the following email address: jakub.mudrak@theatre.sk (Jakub Mudrak– Project Coordinator, the Theatre Institute, Bratislava).
